That Whyness.

Our local last week in reference to the manner in which things are conducted at our depot, should not have gone in without some explanation, or at least addition, to this effect. viz: that the Committee of our Board of Trade presented to the Railroad Commissioners the substance of the complaints we mentioned, and received promises of relief, insofar as they, the Commissioners, could afford it. Besides, it seemed somewhat ungracious in us to lay it on so thickly, when the local authorities were really doing the best they could under the circumstances.

The tremendous amount of labor necessary to adjust the machinery to a nicety, as must be the case in order to have it a success, cannot be properly appreciated without some personal experience of it-so say those who are in charge, and we entirely believe them. MAYESVILLE, S. C., Oct. 23, 1889. Mr. Editor: The new cotton seed planter, patent No. 412,906, invented by Capt. James E. Atkins, proprietor of the Salem Mills, at Mayesville, S. It is very durable, light running, easily managed, saves 4 5 of the cotton seed and one hoeing. Planting two rows at same time, one hand and horse does the work of two. I have no idea that the cotton fire at Mechanicsville was incendiary. I think it was the result of some careless smoker; but the time of its breaking out, about 11 o'clock Sunday, in such a public place, is curious. WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 25, 1889. The Republican leaders, with the approach of the opening of the Fifty-first Congress, grow uneasy. For the first time in years they possess the Presidency and both half past three o'clock. We have neither entirely new list of goods, different from that branches of the national assembly. The responsibility is unavoidable. No more talk of the "opposition of the Democratic party in the House;" no more talk of "Demo-cratic vetoes." The Republican party in the coming session must meet the issues of the day squarely. The revision of the tariff, which the Senate bill of the last session deeach find something of interest and value to clared to be imperative, must be made. Appropriations for purposes long delayed must be levied. Quibbling and lying will avail

> House, the Democratic party is fortunate, inasmuch as it leaves its enemy with enough rope to hang itself. Certain Republican members will doubtless have much to say in the coming session of the faulty and harrassing rules of the House. It is the opinion of candid men on both sides that the rules will not be seriously changed. At any rate any movement looking to the curtailment of the power of the minority in as nearly balanced a body as the present House, will meet with vigorous opposition, and could only result in ignominious defeat. Any attempt on the part of the Republicans to increase their slender majority by throwing out duly elected Democratic members, will be resisted. The speakership fight is essentially between Messrs, Reed and McKinley. Though Messrs. Cannon and Burrows are both here and working tooth and nail for election, they are in the fight only in the hope of being the successful men in the event of a split. Mr. McKinley's chances appear to be the best. He has raised a sectional issue that cannot but be injurious to Mr. Reed, whose state cannot control a sufficient number of mem-

The rejection of Mr. Reed would stamp the was the emptiest compliment, Mr. Reed, as the leader of his party on the floor, accepted the nomination. It was given with the tacit understanding that should the time come when the party held the majority, he would be entitled to the speakership. It is an ill grace that now opposes him. On the first ballot, the majority will vote for Mr. Reed, through duty to this party promise The first ballot will not result in an election. It will be then that the lukewarm and time-serving members will turn to the next candidate in strength, and throw their votes for him. That man will doubtless be Mr. McKinley, and so I predict his election. The civil service law will doubtless remain undisturbed. There may be considerable talk about which administration, Mr. Cleveland's or Mr. Harrison's, has been guilty of the greatest laches regarding the law, but the law itself will remain, though perhaps slightly modified. The alleged selling of copies of questions in advance of their use in examination, will doubless be referred to a committee.
